

CONTEXTUALIZING HEALTH INFORMATION COMMUNICATION TECHNOLOGIES
... an inter-disciplinary national workshop to explore the intersections of ICTs,
Aboriginal health and identity (with Integrative Science participation)

Institute for Integrative Science & Health: www.integrativescience.ca

• October 2011, Toronto, ON

On 14-16 October 2011, a national workshop to explore the intersections of ICTs, Aboriginal health and identity was held at York University under the guidance of co-covenantors Dr. Naomi Adelson of York University and Dr. Cynthia Alexander of Acadia University.

The workshop brought together a small group of individuals with Aboriginal and inter-disciplinary academic perspectives; Cape Breton University's Canada Research Chair in Integrative Science Dr. Cheryl Bartlett was one of the invited participants.

The goal was, through engaged dialogue, to advance the practical and theoretical domains of health ICTs in Aboriginal Canada towards integrative research designs and towards improving the questions we ask as community members, activists, practitioners and researchers.

For more information about the workshop, including its funding and support partners, see: <http://chict.apps01.yorku.ca/>

